Cordelia was the mother of a brood of Haxil Beast spawn. When pregnant with them, she gained a telepathic connection with the children and their father, who used it to control her. Cordelia was forced to be the host of an unborn Skilosh Demon, which granted her a working third eye in the back of her skull until it was removed.

All she could remember of the dark-haired, kind of mousey girl who walked out of the room with a curious gait and a blissed-out smile on her face was that she was one of Cordelia's new recruits. She probably should have remembered her name -- she knew Chrom would have made a point of remembering, he was good at knowing the people under his command, even if he wasn't great with figures. But ...

I want to hear him laugh and feel his rose-petal lips on my skin when he kisses my hand politely. "Three Horses!" A voice calls in the distance. They speak in a language that I do not understand. Michelle and I crouch back into the leaves more, hiding our bodies from barbarian eyes. "Paleface trinket," one slurs, holding up a silver necklace. I refrain myself from gasping, my hand flying to my ...

The oldest version of this trope (the Soothsayer) presents an Empath as a slightly creepy, imposing ancient. Other times, the Empath is sometimes used to insert quick expositions or reveal to the other characters things not allowed by the time constraints of the program, or as a variant of Combat Clairvoyance. They can help The Face do their The Social Expert thing.
